

HELPING FAMILIES BRIDGING COMMUNITIES BUILDING OUR NATION

Annual Report 2018–2019

FROM USCRI'S PRESIDENT AND CEO

America is a nation of bridges. The Brooklyn Bridge, the pride of New York, was built in 1883. It was the first and longest steel-wire suspension bridge in the world. The Golden Gate Bridge, spanning almost two miles across, stands out as an iconic edifice—a marvel of American engineering. Bridges play an immensely important role in connecting the people, goods and services that have made America a global economic power.

At USCRI, we build a different kind of bridge. We build bridges between New Americans and their communities. We build bridges that connect different communities to each other—accentuating our similarities and celebrating our differences. We built bridges across America to places around the globe where people are denied a voice.

These are challenging times where what divides us has become a widespread and pervasive narrative wall threatening to overwhelm the better angels inside us. At USCRI, we believe that bridges, not walls, will keep us safe. That the steel cores of our characters can uplift the weight of our struggles. We pledge to you, our friends and supporters, that we will continue to build bridges with an undiminished belief that America's greatness is in its people.

EL RINCONCITO DEL SOL

“USCRI [has] opened a model government-funded shelter in southern Florida”—ASSOCIATED PRESS

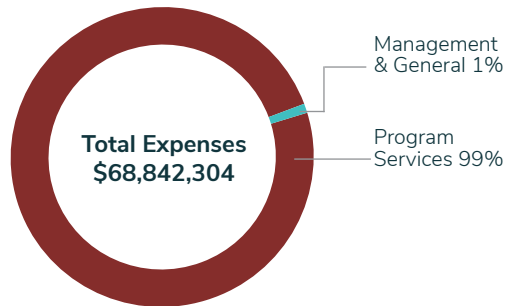

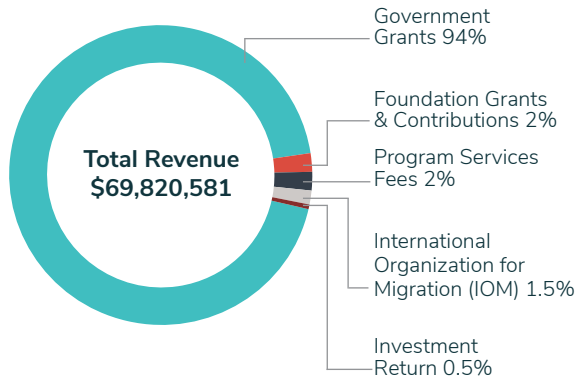

U.S. Congresswoman Lois Frankel visits Roncincito del Sol and said the facility is taking good care of girls in its custody.

In June 2019, USCRI opened a temporary home, Rinconcito del Sol, for unaccompanied migrant girls from the ages of 13 to 17. Rinconcito del Sol, which translates to ‘A Little Corner of Sunshine’, transitions girls as soon as possible to their families in the U.S. while providing them with health and social services, legal representation and continuing education. The girls can also access more therapeutic services—including intensive treatment for victims of trafficking and abuse. The Associated Press, in conjunction with PBS’s Frontline, featured USCRI’s shelter in an article published by dozens of major newspapers, “This summer, USCRI opened a model government-funded shelter in southern Florida, just down the road from Trump’s Mar-a-Lago Club.”
